Production Assistant Training Program – Animation

"I was attending the 2003 Indian Summer Institute at Fox Studios and met Marcelo Bermúdez of Workplace Hollywood during a meeting about what it’s like to be in the entertainment industry" said Deanna Allison. "Animation was always of great interest to me. I’ve been writing stories and designing characters ever since I could remember. When Marcelo talked about all the opportunities available, I figured it was worth the chance of asking if he knew of any opportunities available within animation."

Marcelo notes he didn’t have any open requisitions at the time, but that afternoon, he received a phone call from Warner Bros. asking him if he had candidates who might be interested in their Production Assistant Training Program – Animation. "I had other candidates, but I knew that Deanna was going to make the cut. When you see that kind of motivation about what a person is interested in, you do your best to make it happen."

Deanna has been enjoying exposure to all the facets of animation and has been part of their first show of the year that has just shipped. A new project begins for her in early 2004.
